Restaurant Technologies, Inc. Receives McDonald's Corporation
2005 Supplier Innovation Award

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA, January 17, 2006 – Restaurant Technologies, Inc. (RTI), a leading provider of bulk cooking oil management services to the restaurant industry, announced today that the company is the recipient of the McDonald's Corporation 2005 Supplier Innovation Award. This annual award recognizes a McDonald's supplier that has made a significant contribution to improving the company's process for serving customers.

The RTI closed-loop oil management system allows restaurant managers to lower operating costs, increase productivity and improve working conditions. The patented, automated system provides for the replenishment, filtration and disposal of cooking oil, eliminating dangerous hands-on oil management in the workplace and providing an environmentally sound approach to distribution.

McDonald's began installing the RTI system in 1999. To date, McDonald's has installed the RTI system in approximately 5,000 U.S. locations, eliminating non-value added tasks and improving oil management in these restaurants through RTI's telemetry system of on-line tracking of oil usage. These efficiencies in operations earned RTI the prestigious McDonald's Corporation 2005 Supplier Innovation Award.

"We are delighted to have been chosen for this award," said Jeffrey R. Kiesel, chief executive officer at Restaurant Technologies, Inc. "Our single source solution is designed to efficiently manage our customers' oil consumption and to reduce the risks associated with handling hot cooking oil. We highly value our relationship with McDonald's Corporation and greatly appreciate their confidence in RTI."
